Passage 1

Person A: OK, let's discuss the results of the customer survey about what ways our customers would like us to improve the department store.

Person B: Sure, let's start with the clearest finding, which is that our customers want us to increase the parking spaces available.

Person A: Well, when we complete construction of the new parking area next year, that will add another 150 spaces, which should be more than enough.

Person B: Perhaps we should start advertising that now, to let the customers know that we are addressing their concerns. How about the food hall development?

Person A: We noticed a strong demand for more fresh produce, especially from local farmers. In addition, there was a request for more low-calorie options in our ready meals.

Person B: We should be able to meet these requests, although the price of some products may increase. I'm a little concerned that some customers will be dissatisfied.

Person A: Don't worry! I believe that our customers will be willing to pay more for better quality food.

Person B: I agree. Hopefully they will also be pleased with the special offers we are running to promote the redevelopment.

Question 1: What was the main request from customers in the survey?

A. More parking

B. More low-calorie meals

C. More quality products

Question 2: Which of the following did customers not request?

A. Fresh vegetables

B. Special offers

C. Locally sourced food

Passage 2

Comets are amazing celestial objects composed of frozen gases, rocks, and dust, and are fascinating for both scientists and stargazers. Originating from the extremely cold areas of the outer solar system, these cosmic travelers occasionally make their way close to the sun. As they get near, solar radiation from the sun changes the ice on the surface of the comet's solid core, called the nucleus, creating a cloud around this nucleus, known as the coma. Spectacular tails, comprised of gas and dust follow behind the comet, sometimes millions of kilometers long. From a scientific perspective, comets offer important insights into the early solar system's composition and dynamics. They preserve ancient materials that tell us about the origins of the universe. Thus, studying comets remains important in advancing our understanding of the universe and our place within it.

Question 1: According to the passage, what is the solid core of the comet called?

A. The coma B. The nucleus C. The rocks

Question 2: What do comets contain that help us understand the origins of the universe?

A. Solar radiation B. Very old materials C. Long tails
